

Vanja Golubovic

Designed by Serbian creative, Vanja Golubovic, for a Berlin techno night. The poster communicates a simple, monochrome style that correctly represents the dark, grungy nature of techno. Scarce use of imagery allows the piece to take advantage of white spacing and clearly advertise the events information.

Bold type and lines enforce the grid's aesthetic, allowing the user to understand where to look and how to absorb the poster. The grainy architectural photography reflects the underground culture with the rise of warehouse raves and deters from the designs overall level of simplicity.

George Greaves

Graphic designer George Greaves creates work that’s inspired by architecture and the built environments, drawing on influences that include Georgio De Chico, David Hockney, Matisse, Magritte and Escher.

The two pieces adhere to a duotone styling, allowing more complexity and emphasis with design rather than colours. Use of both natural textures and architecture creates a balance that's visually appealing to the viewer. Heavy-weight type helps information to stand out and clearly displays event information.
