Flyer drop

Invited participants of our event were teased with an edited image of the printed flyers drying and prompted to find Aidan personally to get their hands on their own print. This act tries to replicate the personal nature of the event but also hark back to how raves in the 90's publicised themselves through the process of hand flying and word of mouth awareness.

Tech change [video]

Wanting to implement sound into the interaction, we came to the conclusion that Makey Makey wasn't going to cut it. Using Bare Conductive instead enabled more connections on one board without having to ground a user, enabling easy use by multiple users interacting with the poster all at the same time.
